'It should be borne in mind that it is not Portugal which has declared war on Germany and its allies, but Germany which has declared war on Portugal, basing this action on the question of German ships held in Portuguese ports. But back of this direct issue which brought on a state of war there were strong tendencies in Portugal toward supporting the cause of the entente allies. First there was the traditional alliance Portugal has long had with England, dating for centuries, and always bringing about mutual action between the countries on all the more vital questions of international relations. Then there was also the national sentiment of Portugal as a Latin country to cast its lot with France and the other Latin countries threatened by Germany. And with these two main currents of sentiment, there was the feeling that the cause of the entente allies represente the cause of liberty, justice and hu manity, the sacredness of treaties and the protection of great and small states alike, as against a Teutonic pol icy of aggression, conquest and gen-eral disregard of the restraints of treaties and of international law.

"Some of our people," the minister went on, "felt that Portugal should idopt a policy similar to Spain, o strict neutrality. Others urged that our policy should be like that of Japan, not participating in the war in Europe, but giving our chief attention to our colony in South Africa, as Ja pan is giving her chief attention to her interests in Asia. Then there was the monarchist element still existing in Portugal, which favored joining the entente allies, but opposed everything the republican government desired to do. But these were largely individua LONDON, May 1, 8:05 p. m.—A Reu-shades of opinion, in the press and among the public. it is only six years since the monar-chy was replaced by a republic. The fearful wastefulness of the old monarchial regime had left us a heavy financial indebtedness compared with the resources of the country. Moreover, Portugal had not been at war for a hundred years, and it had got out of the war of supporting a large and effective army and navy. But with these drawbacks, the war was undertaken organized and some 50,000 men have been sent to the front, a considerable part of them to the western front in Europe, and a large force to our colony in Africa." When the minister was asked as to the military situation in Portugese Africa he said:

Military Situation. "We have pushed forward into German East Africa until our troops now hold a considerable portion of the gian and Portugese troops."

"Then Portugal will have conquered possessions as the result of the war, was suggested.

"Portugal actually occupies this adpossessions she had at the outset. The one paramount desire of the country is dents of warfare may bring us in conquered territory, our chief preoccupation will be to preserve and guard what Portugal has had in the present. rather than to seek extensions of territory. We are not in the war for conquest, but in defense of our possessions and of the rights of ourselves and our allies."

Insincere Peace Proposal. "What did Portugal think of Germany's peace proposition?" the minis was asked. "We did not look upon it as a sincere move toward peace," he replied, but merely as a ruse de guerre; and was for this reason we joined with the other entente allies in formally rejecting the proposition. All the information reaching us indicates that Germany's military and economic forces are gradually being drained to the point of exhaustion, and it was this, no doubt, which led to the proposal of peace largely as a means of gaining time. Their apprehension of what was coming has now been realized in the retreat of the German army along the western front, for the advices of our military advisers leave no doubt as to its being a forced retreat before the overwhelming superiority of the entente forces, and not a strategic reirement as they seek to make it apear. Our advices show, too, that their food condition is desperate and one of the neutral ministers, who has recently spent a month in Berlin, told ne the situation was exceedingly grave, particularly among the poorer classes, who are clamoring for the necessaries of life and against the government. So that we feel with our allies that a slow wearing out of the Jerman campaign is not far off, and hat victory is assured to the entente ations.' When the minister was asked as to President Wilson's proposal of a lasting league to ensure international peace, he said:

President Wilson Approved. 'President Wilson's proposal was reroval in Portugal, and the discussion t aroused showed how popular feel ing was stirred by the noble senti ments it expressed for the inviolabilty of treaties, the safe-guarding of small states and nationalities, and the orinciples which Portugal, as a repubc, feels for the rights of the people. As one of the entente allies, Portugal udhered to the reply made to the American note, in which the specific erms of the allies were made known,

An achievement! Isn't it?

The Proof of These Statements

There's no theory about these cost-of-operation figures. They're based on what thousands of Maxwell owners are actually doing-running their cars on an absolute outlay of only $6 to $8 a month.

These enthusiastic Maxwell owners tell us, too, that they get upwards of 30 miles out of a gallon of gasoline—many do better than that.

The Maxwell holds the world's record for a non-motor-stop run. A Maxwell stock car made 22,022 miles in 44 days nights-went 22 miles on every gallon of gasoline used on that long jaunt.
